

Reconciling Drug Use With Ethics and Religion

William Leo

JOURNALISM

ABSTRACT: As a Jesuit university, Georgetown has always had a strong connection to religious traditions and ethics. But the question of how drug use and religion intersect causes confusion for many young people on campus. This article interrogates different religious traditions and their views on drug use, in addition to interviewing students and presenting their experiences on the intersection between spiritual belief and recreational substance use.

ACADEMIC YEAR: 2019

SCHOOL: COL

MAJOR: Philosophy, Economics